MOSCOW

One of the oldest residents of this vicinity, in the person of Mrs. Israel Stewart, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Levi Evans. Deceased was highly respected and much beloved by all. She was a life-long member of the Methodist church, and was a faithful worker all her life.

Miss Sproule, Napanee, spent the week-end at Mrs. Huffman's.

Miss Gladys Asselstine spent the week-end at the rectory, Bath.

We are glad to hear that John Bell is improving slowly.

Miss Lord returned to Kingston on Thursday last.

A number of the ladies of Moscow attended the Sunday School Convention at Enterprise, also the Women's Auxiliary Convention at Newburgh.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Long, Peterboro, are visiting at H. Palmer's.

Donald VanLuven, of California, is visiting his uncle, E. L. VanLuven.

A number from Moscow attended the anniversary services and tea meeting at Colebrook, and report a fine time.

WILTON

The death occurred at Kingston general hospital on Oct. 12th, of Emma Storms, a resident of Wilton, who passed away following a short illness. The remains were brought to the home of her brother, K. N. Storms. The funeral services were held in the Methodist church on Tuesday morning at 10.30 o'clock, conducted by Rev. G. Stafford, Sydenham. The remains were placed in the Wilton cemetery. The late Miss Storms is survived by seven brothers, Korah and Sim, Wilton; William, Yarker; John, Sydenham; Albert N., Odessa; Robert, Watertown, N.Y.; Peter, California; one sister, Hattie, Watertown, N.Y., and Roy Storms, Toronto.

Mr. Winslow Lewis, Washington, D.C., spent a week at the home of his nephew, Mr. Blake Switzer, and with other friends in Kingston and Collins Bay.

W. B. Storms left on Tuesday for Rutherford, N.J., to spend some time with his sister, Mrs. C. Booth.

CAMDEN EAST

We are glad to report that the majority of those on the sick list are much improved.

The paper mill is closed down again and several are attending a meeting of the directors at Ottawa.

The anniversary services held in the Methodist church Sunday last were well attended. Excellent semons were given by Rev. Terrel, of Grace Methodist church Napanee.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Sanderson, and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Alkenbrack were Sunday visitors at T. H. Stovers.

James Davy, of Wilton, was at James Skinner's on Sunday, and attended the anniversary services.

Mrs. Jas. Robinson was at her daughter's, Mrs. Ed. Hamilton, of Bicknell's Corners, for a few days last week.

Mrs. C. Vay and Doris left on Monday for Watertown and other points.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Hartman spent Tuesday at Collins Bay attending the 100 anniversary of their aunt, Mrs. Darius Smith.

The remains of the late Mrs. Stewart, of Moscow, were laid to rest in the family plot in St. Luke's cemetery on Thursday last.

Jas. Skinner had the misfortune to loose his fine show room and three other buildings by fire Wednesday morning. The cause of the fire is unknown. Some think it was caused by electricity. Loss is $3,000 and only $1,000 insurance. The fire company from Newburgh came up and helped to check the fire. We also had help from Ernesttown and Camden. If it had not been for the help and the rain the night before more damage would heave been done. Lesley Skinner lost all his tools and goods. We must thank Mrs. Blakely for the part she took in sounding the alarm.

Tobacco Mystery Then.

Some manuscripts of the early eighteenth century have been published by the British Parliament recently and among these documents is an account of the way in which English tobacco manufacturers prevented their secrets getting known and used in Russia more than 200 years ago, says a British exchange. It seems that Nathaniel Gould and others had made a contract with the Czar of Muscovy in 1698 to import quantities of tobacco into his dominions, and sent over "Peter Marshall and his wife, versed in the cutting and curing of tobacco, together with instruments and materials necessary thereunto." Other merchants of London had also entered into contracts with the czar's officers to supply large quantities of tobacco and to send "As many persons skilled in the spinning of tobacco as the czar should require, by which means your subjects would become equally skilled in that mystery with any of her majesty's subjects, dealers in tobacco." The English tobacco manufacturers petitioned Queen Anne, and that redoubtable monarch nipped the scheme in the bud. It was ordered that the "said persons were to be conveyed out of Muscovy, and the engines to be broken immediately." And so the "mystery" was not disclosed.

AUTO UPSET IN DITCH

MRS. J. WHEELER SO SERIOUSLY INJURED THAT SHE DIED SATURDAY

On Tuesday afternoon while Mrs. John Wheeler and her son, and Mr. Frank Lloyd, of Kingston, were driving Mrs. Wheeler's new McLaughlin car on the Provincial highway, near Westbrooke, they met with an accident which subsequently cost Mrs. Wheeler her life, and in which her son was quite badly injured, and Mr. Lloyd somewhat hurt. The party were driving at a good rate and just ahead of them was a car driven by Mr. Wm. Shellington. It is claimed that Mr. Shellington drove on the left side of the road in order to make a turn into his own gate, also slackening his speed. This move evidently took Mrs. Wheeler's son, who was driving the Wheeler car, by surprise, and he had to make a quick swing to the left to avoid a collision. As it was he struck the rear fender of Mr. Shellington's car in passing. The car took the ditch and turned over twice, pinning Mrs. Wheeler under it. People who were nearby soon rendered assistance, and Mrs. Wheeler was removed from under the car and taken to Mr. Shillington's house, and a doctor and an ambulance from Kingston was summoned.

Mrs. Wheeler and the two young men were taken to Kingston hospital where their injuries were attended to. It was found that Mrs. Wheeler had sustained serious injuries to her head, her skull being fractured, and though she became conscious, was unable to make any statement. She passed away on Saturday morning. Her son had his hand broken and a number of bruises besides receiving a shock from which he is still suffering acutely. Mrs. Wheeler's remains were brought to Napanee, and the funeral took place on Tuesday morning in St. Patrick's church. Besides her husband she leaves one son and one daughter.

The U. E. L. Dramatic Club have been busy of late. They repeated their play in the town hall at Sillsville on October 14th under the auspices of the Union church. In spite of the pouring rain and high winds a fairly well filled house greeted them. The weather conditions were ideal for their trip to Bath last Friday night. The play was given there under the management of the Bath library board. Saturday night they journeyed to Enterprise in behalf of the Mission Circle there. They also have an engagement with the I.O.D.E. at Napanee, for Nov. 11th.

Notwithstanding the showery afternoon the Ladies' Aid met at Mrs. R. Hawley's on Wednesday afternoon. They decided to hold a series of social evenings in aid of the church fund. The first will be at the home of the Misses Merkle next Wednesday evening.

Wellington Hay, whip, was appointed leader pro tem.

The ratings expressed its appreciation of Mr. Dewart's sacrifices for his party, and a committee will arrange for a suitable and practical recognition thereof.

MAY CALL OFF STRIKE.

"Big Five" Will Have to Stand Alone In Struggle.

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—The "Big Five" railroad brotherhoods will stand practically alone, if they carry out their threat to strike on Oct. 30.

More than three-fourths of the organized rail workers of the country decided on Sunday not to take part in any strike which the men have protested.

Only the telegraphers have cast their lot with the "Big Five."

Officials of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Train Handlers, Express and Station Employes, with a membership of 350,000, have joined the unions which have voted not to go on strike by adopting a resolution in which their men are refused authorization to walk out for the time being. The matter will be reconsidered after the Labor Board renders its rules and working conditions decision.

The action of these men came a blow to the plans of the "Big Five" brotherhoods should the latter decide to carry out their threat. Their walkout, however, depends on the results of negotiations with railroad executives and the Labor Board here on Wednesday.

It is generally believed here that this conference will end in a settlement, and, in that case, of course, n one will strike.

As the situation stands eleven unions have decided no to strike and six are still in favor of a walk out if their negotiations with board fail on Wednesday. Those who have announced for a strike a the engineers, firemen, trainmen, conductors, switchmen and telegraphers. Those who oppose are the seven shop crafts, maintenance o way men, clerks, yardmasters and stationary engineers, firemen and oilers.

Word came from Cleveland that headquarters of the brotherhoods there were being flooded with telegrams from all over the country. The "Big Four" chiefs were hearing from their constituents. Contents of the telegrams were closely guarded, but it was understood sentiment was divided.

The Federal Labor Board did not intimate what proposition would be made the brotherhoods and railroad executives when they go before the Board on Wednesday. It was expected, however, that the roads would be asked to abrogate the order for the new 10 per cent. reduction in wages, and the brotherhoods would be asked to accept the 12½ per cent. reduction of last July.

To Spite Spirits.

Drugs and toilet preparations over three thousand years old have been added to the Wellcome Historical Medical Museum in Wigmore street, London, England.

Some of these drugs came from a grave made fifteen hundred years before Christ.

One of the most remarkable exhibits is the case of "shrunken" heads. These were prepared by natives in Ecuador, and by an undisclosed process have been reduced perfectly to about the size of a small orange. The lips are sewn across so that the "spirit" of the dead should not escape and do harm to the owner.

Persons who think they are up-to-date in having gold bridge work on their false teeth will be surprised to know that there is a fine example of gold bridged teeth once worn by an Etruscan (a native of Etruria, an ancient country in central Italy), who got them from his dentist three thousand years ago.

Tanlac is purely vegetable and is made fom the most beneficial roots, herbs and barks known to science. Tanlac is sold in Napanee at Wallace's Drug Store, Limited, and by leading druggists everywhere.

Leather From the Sea.

Leather from the amphibious crocodile has been used for a long time. But the skins became scarce, owing to the great war, was the possibility of getting leather from the skins of fishes seriously considered. Then it was found that the ray or devil-fish and many species of shark would yield an excellent and very stout leather, and now catching sharks for their skins is an established industry at Vancouver, and also in the East Indies and Australia. The devil-fish, which is really a huge skate, is among the monsters of the deep.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

Last week the Liberal chieftain finished his tour of the Maritime Provinces. The opening of the week saw him at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, where he addressed a meeting on Wednesday and later crossed again to the mainland to deliver a series of speeches in New Brunswick before returning to Ottawa.

Everywhere his reception has been the same. The tour of Nova Scotia ended with Hon. Mr. King feeling in high spirits. At all points in that Province he has been greeted by thousands of people, many of his audiences had been Conservatives who realized that the time had come for a change, and everywhere the brilliant young leader left a wonderful impression behind him.

Premier Meighen and his pilgrims have been doing their little best to stem the tide which is sweeping over the Eastern Provinces, carrying their campaign of harsh language into the cities down by the sea. But Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have given assurance that when the votes are counted on December 6th, these two provinces will be almost, if not quite solidly, Liberal.

In Nova Scotia a Conservative estimate of the Liberal members who will be returned place them at twelve. Prince Edward Island has four members, and the indications are that four Liberals will be sent to Ottawa though the government forces are attempting to split the vote against them by introducing farmers in the field wherever possible. Government supporters themselves talk of only one seat as a possibility for them on the Island, and they are not too confident of that.

• • •

Premier Meighen is coming forth as a prophet, and his prophecies are indications of being borne out by returns on election day. The First Minister of Canada declares that the party which is spreading the campaign of misrepresentation in the Maritime Provinces will find itself, on election day, without a verdict. That is what the people down there claim also, but they make it more definite and name the Government as the party which is spreading the campaign of misrepresentation in the Maritime Provinces, but as usual, is repelling many of his hearers by exaggerations and vituperation, while on the other hand, the Liberal Chief is gaining new friends every day by his fairness in dealing with the problems of the day and outlining the needs of Canada in the future.

A significant omen of victory was brought about last week. Previous to the election of 1896, which resulted in the return of the Laurier administration and the dawn of the Golden Era of prosperity for Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in Charlottetown addressing a meeting when the word was brought to him that the date of the election had been decided. Hon. Mackenzie King was in Charlottetown when the word was brought to him that the election would take place on Tuesday, December 6th.

To carry the parallel further, it was pointed out that previous to the election of 1896 conditions were very bad in the Dominion. Business was stagnant, and the people were in a state of unrest after several years of Tory rule. Then came the elections with the return of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as Premier, and the beginning of fifteen years of prosperity for the country.

Mr. King received the news in Charlottetown as a happy omen for victory. Coming as it did on the top of many other indications that the twilight of the Meighen Government had approached, it might well be looked upon as such.

• • •

It is perhaps significant of the truth of the alleged change in government to notice that the men who handed out the announcement of the election date and the men who handed out the manifesto at Ottawa, were Senators Reid and Calder. Apparently, though Hon. John Dowsley Reid, of Prescott, has retired from the government he and Mr. Calder are still of it. Apparently they are to earn their Senatorial emoluments by handling elections for the young premier and, of course, being at hand to vote down anything in the Senate which Mr. Meighen does not want to pass.

One of the questions of the day down in the Maritime Provinces is: "Who are the new Ministers?" Nobody, apparently, ever heard of them, and even Quebec people who lapped to be down there are unable to give the natives any information. Nobody knows. Bellev, Monty or Normand, and after another two months nobody will ever hear of them again.

• • •

While the Prime Minister has had to have ejected from his Halifax meetings, persons who disagreed with him and dared to question his authority, there has been nothing but a warm welcome for the Liberal leader in all parts of the Provinces. Mr. King and his lieutenants have been cheered for their frank discussions of the problems of the day and the able manner in which they have outlined them and the remedies necessary to meet them.

"We are not Free Traders," Mr. King has declared in many of his speeches, "but we are freer traders. We believe that the basic industries of this country must be developed, and that in order to develop these there must be a revision of the tariff, which would make the implements and instruments of production bear the least possible burden. And the necessities of life must also be relieved, so far as possible, from contributing.

The tariff must remain; no man would dare suggest that we do away with a tariff in Canada; but it should be revised. If you leave that revision in the hands of Mr. Meighen it will be revised in the interests of that small, but powerful coterie of manufacturers who are now dictating the government's course of action. If you elect the Liberal party to office you will have revision of the tariff in the interests of the home and its needs, and you will further have the strictest economy and retrenchment in public expenditures, with a saving of every dollar of the people's money which can be saved, and a careful accounting to the people for all money spent.

"The choice is yours" the Liberal leader warned his audiences, "It is for you to say whether you want economy or continued extravagence; whether you want freedom and representative government or continued arbitrary actions by the Meighen Government; whether you wish to continue in office an autocracy or get back to proper principles of government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

At the conclusion of his tour of the Maritime Provinces, with the four meetings in New Brunswick, the Liberal leader returns to Ottawa for a couple of weeks addressing several meetings in Ontario. Then he will go West for a fortnight or so, it is expected, and spend the last two weeks of the campaign preaching the gospel of Liberalism and Unity in Ontario and Quebec.

Reports from all sections of the country are most encouraging.

I SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Paris, Ont.—"For five years I suffered from pains caused by displacement of my organs and in my back. All of this time I was unfit for work and was taking different medicines that I thought were good. I saw the advertisement in the papers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took it faithfully. I am now in perfect health and do all my own work. I recommend it to others, and give you permission to publish this letter in your little books and in the newspapers as a testimonial."—Mrs. D. Cassady, Box 461, Paris, Ont.

Why women will continue to suffer so long is more than we can understand, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound!

For forty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

An array of splendid candidates are being placed in the field in all parts of the Dominion, and the men already nominated are such as to ensure that when the Liberal administration is returned to office in December, as it promises to be, there will be within its ranks the material for a cabinet of first-class business men, competent to handle the affairs of the Dominion, rather than, as at present, a cabinet made up of men who "came in looking for the title and had nowhere to go."

CLEARING OUT TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE

The accredited herd system put in operation two years ago by the Health of Animals Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa has been well received by the stockmen of the country. It is confined to pure bred cattle and is intended to rid as rapidly as possible the disease of tuberculosis from Canadian herds. Figures given out by the Veterinary Director General show that thirty-six herds had up to Oct. 1st been fully accredited. The breeds represented are the Ayrshire, Holstein, Jersey, Shorthorn and Aberdeen Angus, the dairy breeds predominating. The accredited herds are widely distributed. Nova Scotia has 1, Quebec 9, Ontario 10, Manitoba 2, Saskatchewan 4, and British Columbia 10.

Besides the herds which have been fully accredited there are at present 558 herds which have been tested once or more in process of accreditation, and 54 herds awaiting the first test, making a total of 648 herds. As the herds in the list fulfill the necessary conditions, they become fully accredited. The Inspectors of the Health of Animals Branch are making as rapid progress as is possible under the circumstances, taking into consideration the limited number of men engaged in the work and the great importance of doing the testing carefully and accurately rather than rapidly.

The reactors are always removed from the herd at once and usually are immediately slaughtered under veterinary supervision. Applications for tests have been coming in faster than they could be dealt with. A waiting list has therefore been formed and as soon as circumstances permit the herds in this list will be tested, taking them as far as possible in the order in which applications have been received.

CANADA'S WEALTH.

Summary of Pamphlet Used By the Victoria League.

Canada as a place in which virile, varied and often romantic work is done is the picture of this country presented by W. L. Grant in his pamphlet written for the Victoria League of England.

Mr. Grant is principal of Upper Canada College, Toronto. Formerly he was Beit lecturer in colonial history at Queen's University, Kingston. His pamphlet has been written for the Victoria League as one of a series on parts of the Empire. The series has been planned in response to a request from representatives of the National Union of Teachers and the London Teachers' Association.

Even in his historical introduction Mr. Grant emphasizes wood, fish and fur, forest and farm. They are still, he says, the quadrilateral on which Canada's prosperity is based.

Canada and the great West, he says, were taken over by Great Britain not so much from any sense of their imperial value as to aid the fishermen and fur traders of the north country and of the American colonies.

It was the search for fur that led to the foundation in England of a chartered company, the Hudson Bay Company (1670). After the British conquest, Scottish merchants in Montreal founded a rival company, the Northwest Fur Trading Company (1787), which went overland in search of furs. Mackenzie, Fraser, Thompson were three of the leaders in this work, men whose names have been perpetuated in our rivers.

In 1820 the two rival companies united.

The basic industry of Canada, says Grant, in every province from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is farming. The farm produce of Ontario still outvalues that of any other province.

This will be a surprise for the English publicist, "Lens," who recently visited Canada and who told his English readers that the soil of Ontario was so poor that the farmers could do scarcely anything with it.

The great foe of the Canadian farmer, especially in the West, according to Grant, is the early frost. The long winter is in a sense an advantage, for the frost strikes deep, and as it gradually thaws during the summer provides for the roots of grain the moisture which they might otherwise lack. But the early frost still causes terror, though a terror which is gradually receding. As more and more ground is broken up, it more readily absorbs the warmth of the sun, and the coming of the frost is delayed. Experiments have produced varieties of wheat, first the Red Fife, now the Marquis, which combine earlier ripening with greater resistance to frost.

The heat of the summer, Mr. Grant says, brings about the production of fruit in great quantities. Although the lateness of the spring forces the importation of early fruits from the United States, the superior flavor of the more northern fruit causes an even greater exportation later on.

In all but the prairie provinces, he says, fruit is cheap and plentiful and a universal staple of diet.

"Lens" also commented on the number of apples eaten by people on this continent, although he thought it would be better for their teeth if they would eat apples at the beginning rather than at the end of a meal.

Despite the statements both of Grant and "Lens," a good many people would disagree about fruit being cheap. Large sections of the people, even in Ontario, scarcely find fruit a "staple of diet" as they would like it to be.

The timber industry, Mr. Grant goes on, in which so many fortunes have been won and lost, is still of primary importance.

The fur trade, in early days the staple industry, is now less important, though in the far north thousands of natives and not a few white men still look to it for their maintenance. Trapping is being supplemented by domestication, especially of the skunk and of the black fox.

As for game, there is no fear of its extinction. Large Government reserves of thousands of square miles in the heart of the forest, scattered across the continent, in which shooting is strictly forbidden, give shelter to feather and to fur. As a result deer and moose, the herds of which had become depleted, are now increasing greatly in numbers.

Fishing is also described by the principal of Upper Canada, who then tells the tale of mining for gold in the Yukon and for silver in northern Ontario.

Mr. Grant does not neglect manufacturing. The capital, he says, invested in Canadian manufactures is almost double the estimated value of the arable land now under cultivation.

The manufacturing centres in Ontario and Quebec were long hampered by the absence of coal, but the "white coal" of electric power generated from Niagara Falls and a hundred smaller waterfalls and rapids now makes up the deficiency and foretells a great manufacturing future for central Canada.

An Uncanny Record.

Sixty-five thousand landings in twenty-two years without a mishap. Such is the record of Capt. Burton S. Baker, who has just celebrated his twenty-second year as captain of the steamer Tashmoo of the White Star line, running between Port Huron and Detroit, and making sixteen stops en route.

It is related of a Belgian chef of the Tashmoo that on one occasion he came on deck near Belle Isle, to get a few whiffs of air, and then went below. Considerably later he came on deck again. "Ah! Still at Belle Isle," he said, though the steamer was passing the Flats and a half dozen stops had been made while he was down in his compartment in the hold.

In the twenty-two years, Captain Baker has missed landings but one—a cold afternoon in 1916 on the return trip from Port Huron, when the wind blew a hurricane. The old club at the Flats was the only landing made.

The Tashmoo is the largest steamer landing head-on both up and down stream and makes more stops daily than any other steamer operating out of Detroit.

"You don't learn the trick of landing well in a year," admits the captain, who has sailed the lakes twenty-nine years.

Our Sale has been a Great Success

All Obligations Big and Small Have Been Met!

We wish to thank all our friends, customers, and the buying public, for the staunch, loyal support they gave us during the past two weeks. Thanks to your patronage we have been able to meet all our obligations—pay all bills on time—and retain our credit standing. For this we are truly grateful. We were "up against it." Following our policy of former seasons, we had bought a very large quantity of heavy Underwear, Sweaters, Woolen Goods of all kinds—many thousands of dollars' worth. By buying in large quantities we can get better prices, and sell you high grade merchandise for less than the merchant who buys from day to day. But these goods did not sell as fast this fall as in former years, owing to the backward season. Time went by—bills began to come in—and we had no ready cash to meet them. There was only one thing to do—force the issue—mark these goods so low that you would be tempted to buy them for future use. This we did. You responded nobly to our appeal and everything is all right once more.

We have many of these high grade Sweaters and Woolen Garments left. They are still marked at Sale Prices, and at these prices you can get them as long as they last. This applies equally to everything in the store.

Once more we wish to thank you, and promise you as great values for your money as in the past.

Opossums.

Opossums, which were introduced into New Zealand from Australia many years ago, have increased until they have become a pest in the fruit-growing regions. Nevertheless, their value for fur outweighs the damage they do. It is therefore proposed to give them every chance to breed in the forested regions. Watermelons, too, grow in New Zealand.

Benedictines Will Live In Castle of Kylemore, Among the Friendly Irish

YPRES was witness to perhaps some of the most frightful encounters of the recent European struggle. Nothing now remains of its monuments of mediaeval Flemish art, its magnificent Cloth Hall and of its stately churches, striking memorials of the days of the city's greatest prosperity. In the midst of all that has been levelled by the "red artillery" of the invader the Benedictine community continued for well nigh 250 years to lead a life of prayer and contemplation and scholastic labor. The original annals of the abbey, many of which have been badly charred by the flames, point to the fact that in the year 1665 a small band of Irish Benedictine Dames, professed at the Monastery of Ghent, established with episcopal sanction a monastery and school at Ypres. It was a tranquil seclusion, where a monastic education was given and where Irishwomen might pursue their religious life with a freedom denied them in their native land. Under the rule of Lady Abbess Butler, cousin to the Duke of Ormonde, the abbey had the patronage of the Stuarts, and on the invitation of James II. removed to Dublin in 1687; but the revolution and subsequent events in Ireland compelled the nuns to return to Ypres. There the abbey stood for more than two centuries and a half. The art treasures bestowed by distinguished personages, as well as the annals and documents accumulated and preserved by successive generations of the Daughters of St. Benedict, made it the pride and esteem in which the monastery was held. It was the only religious house in Flanders which weathered the storm through the Austrian, French and Dutch invasions.

But the onslaught of 1914 brought a crisis. The ramparts of Ypres were levelled by German shot and shell, and the abbey was bombarded. Its inmates resolved to hold the conventual fortress till death, and it was only on stern orders from the civil authorities that the bolts of the inclosure were drawn back. It was indeed a day of desolation when the cloisters Daughters of St. Benedict found themselves homeless wanderers on the road to Poperinghe. One of them describes the situation thus, to the London correspondent of the New York World:

"We experienced much courtesy on the part of the military authorities, who did everything possible to facilitate our journey to England. There we were cordially received as guests of the Lady Abbess and the community of Oulton Abbey staffs. After a vain effort to return to Ypres, and later a brief stay at Highfield House, Londop, the interests of our community were taken in hand by Abbot Columba Marmion, who was then in Ireland with some of his monks from Marcdsous Abbey, Belgium.

"Through the efforts of his prior, Dom Aubert Merten, formerly secretary to the late Abbot Primate of the Benedictines in Rome, the benevolence of the Irish public was extended in our favor and we received as a gift Merten House, County Wexford. The late John Redmond, whose niece is a member of our community, and the late Barry O'Brien, were foremost among our benefactors. There we were able to continue our monastic observance, and several pupils begged admission to our school. Owing to the increasing number of recruits and to our order in Ireland, as well as the great demand for higher education, we were obliged to rent Macmine. This was the only solution of our difficulty at the time, but the castle proved to be very unhealthy, owing to its position in the marshy valley of the Slaney. During an epidemic there we lost two members of our monastic family. Dom Aubert Merten, who is chronicler to the Holy See with the temporal and spiritual affairs of the community, succeeded in acquiring, with the influential assistance of some of his friends, the magnificent property and castle of Kylemore.

"Thus was fulfilled the long-desired hope for the return of the Benedictines to their native land. The Archdiocese of Tuam was the place chosen by Providence for this Irish ashlare, under the patronage of an archbishop who falls in no wise short of the traditions of his saintly and scholarly predecessors. The castle is worthy of the great order. It is a huge Gothic structure with spacious salons and endless suites of rooms. There is perfection in every detail, from the battlements down in the solid rock of the Connemaran slopes, to the stately battlements and towers which rear their heads in solemn grandeur over the shimmering lake beneath."

The beautiful church in the grounds is an example of the pure Gothic style. The property, costing £41,000 (of which sum £35,000 was borrowed at 6 per cent. interest), extends over 10,000 acres, the greater part of which is to be distributed and sold to the poor people of Connemara. The mountains, lakes and rivers it comprises are perhaps unrivalled for scenic beauty.

A Dickens Letter.

A characteristic letter from Dickens, declining an invitation to dinner, except on some tremendous provocation, such as a twin brother's coming home from China and having appointed to return next morning, which does not often happen. On the one side I perceive a clear head looking forward to the end of Chuzzlewit; on the other, a blear-eyed (but amiable and pie-possessing) youth, drinking cold water, and incapable of any mental exertion greater than ordering it."

THOMSON CLAN FOREGATHER.

Descendants of Founders of Scarboro Unveil Memorial.

In Old St. Andrew's Cemetery, the picturesque spot where lie buried practically all the township forefathers, a memorial was recently unveiled to David and Mary Thomson, founders of Scarboro. More than 1,500 people, nearly all bound to each other by ties of blood, witnessed the impressive ceremony and devoutly thanked Providence for bounteous gifts bestowed on them in the 125 years that have elapsed since the "Father" and "Mother" of Scarboro' first penetrated the wilderness.

On the graves of their ancestors, amid tombstones that dated as far back as 1812, the people stood and listened to various speakers recall the events of the years that had passed since the first white couple penetrated the gloomy forest. The unveiling was performed by Col. Alexander Fraser, Provincial Archivist.

Incorporated on one face of the tablet are the tombstones that marked the place where the old couple lie. These were fast crumbling away but now, firmly imbedded in granite, will be preserved for all time. In bold letters across the top of the memorial is the inscription: "To their honor, who redeemed their township from the wilderness."

It was a gathering national in scope. From practically every province men and women of the same blood as the Pioneers had gathered to do honor to the memory of their ancestors. From a branch of the family still in Scotland, greetings were received.

Mrs. Thomson, of Toronto, chairman of the Thomson-Glendinning Memorial Committee, presided, and others who took par. in the service were: W. J. Thomson, ex-Ald. A. Walton, Toronto; T. A. Paterson, Agincourt; Archibald Thomson, Orillia; Thomas Glennie, Toronto; Rev. J. Elliott, Midland, and Rev. Malcolm McArthur, Brampton.

Archibald Thomson, a descendant of another branch of the family, stated that at Orillia a community numbering more than 300 Thomsons had grown up.

After the service, beside the rivulet that borders the cemetery, the gathering picnicked in the family stop the ruins of their common ancestors' first cottage. Here reminiscences commenced, and from group to group the people wandered, meeting relatives they had never seen before.

So mixed up have relationships in Scarboro become during the past 125 years that the committee found it impossible to absolutely define the direct descendants of David and Mary Thomson.

So the descendants of Andrew and Archibald Thomson and Walter Glendinning were also included in the reunion. How many of the clan there are to establish the fact that the number runs into the thousands. When Mary Thomson died at the age of 80 there were more than 100 descendants living.

Mrs. William Ionson, of Toronto, was the only one of the five grandchildren surviving who was present. The other grandchildren are: Thomas Thomson, Agincourt; A. W. Thomson, East Toronto; James Thomson, Fairlie, Alberta, and Mrs. K. S. Barron Barnes, Harrington, Ont.

Tom Foster, M.P. for East York, and Hon. G. S. Henry were present. But it was a day for recalling memories, not for talking politics, though the Thomsons and their kin, like all Scotsmen, are keen politicians.

Head of British Chemists.

The latest of Ontario's sons to bring international honors to Canada in the world of science is Prof. Robert Fulford Ruttan, M.D., D. Sc., F.R.S.C., president-elect of the Society of Chemical Industry, an empire-wide body, which is now standing, now in convention in Montreal. A son of the country surgery, he was born in 1856, at Newburgh, Ont., to Allan Ruttan, M.D., and Caroline Ruttan, and educated at Napanee High School and the University of Toronto, to enter his father's profession.

Instead of practicising behind old Dobbin on the corduroy roads, young Dr. Ruttan became, in 1887, a teacher of chemistry at McGill University and has risen to the direction of the chemistry department in all the faculties. He was one of the original members of the Canadian branch of the Society of Chemical Industry and became a vice-president of the parent body in 1914. His direction of sub-committees of the Canadian Advisory Council for Scientific and Industrial Research was followed by his election to the position of advisory chairman of the council, a position which he recently resigned. An inspiring teacher and active organizer, he also has achieved much in practical research. His services to chemistry were recognized by his alma mater, the University of Toronto, in conferring on him the honorary degree of doctor of science. His most recent work was in assisting at the organization of the International Union of Chemistry at Brussels in 1919. As a young man he was a prominent cricketer; his recreations in recent years have been golf and travel.

His writings, degrees, honors and activities are legion and the unique thing about his new office is that he is the first Canadian so honored. Not only because he is a Canadian but because of his many services to Government and industry in his native land, Dr. Ruttan's election is appreciated by his fellow countrymen, even if they know no more of chemistry than that H20 is that in which people drown.

Bathing Machine Disappears

THE local authorities at several of the popular English seaside resorts have decided upon the abolition of bathing machines. Whether tents or little compartments in a more or less permanent building upon or near the shore are to be substituted for them we are not told. Each year has witnessed a withdrawal of these cumbrous structures from the amenities of places competing for the popular patronage of visitors and holiday-makers, who are now demanding more modern and comfortable accommodation in connection with their bathing, swimming, and aquatic recreations.

Bathing-vans or "machines"—the noun itself retains the flavor of an earlier day—represented rather more than merely grimy, draughty, and generally unpleasant anterooms to the ocean that perverted sun could devise. They stood, as one writer recently put it, "for a vested interest in propriety as it was once understood"—an investment in a convention which would continue to yield its returns as long as this wood held together and aged horses could draw the combination to the waves.

In recent summers and from various holiday places there have been tales of those who defied the convention, to the scandal of those who still claimed to be bound by it. When inquiries had been set on foot whereas the effective head and front of the protest usually proceeded from the proprietors of bathing-vans, who, naturally, had a definite interest in suppressing the origin of their alarm.

The historian of the bathing machine has yet to come. There will be rivalry among the different cities that fringe our shores as to which may claim the distinction of its origin, and on this point the usual sources of encyclopaedic information afford no enlightenment.

Nor has the inspired much of literary notice or reference, though you may recall that an appreciation of it is one of the five unmistakable signs by which you may distinguish the true and genuine snark—

The fourth is its fondness for bathing machines,
Which it constantly carries about,
And declares that they add to the beauty of scene—
A sentiment open to doubt.

Artists are clearly in accord with Lewis Carroll's uncertainty as to their value in the seascape, for the only pictures in which one ever recalls bathing machines as a part of the view are those which surmounted the notepaper that was offered to our former generation, along with boxes encrusted with seashells, and mugs inscribed "A present from Ramsgate," or Scarborough, as the case might be.

It is possible to be well under middle-age, and yet to recall the part played by the bathing machine in a summer holiday. People formed up after the manner of the war-time queue for sugar or margarine, to receive their licence entitling them in turn to the use of a bathing machine.

In due course, when its former temporary occupant had enjoyed her dip, most probably clinging the while to the rope that was a part of the equipment, it was to be conveniable horse which had learned complete indifference to the wavelets, rode out, effected the attachment, and pulled the structure back to relatively dry sand.

Its occupant emerged smiling and refreshed, and your own turn came. The floor was very wet, and, were the little fixed seats, but there were pegs on which to hang dresses, and a very blurred mirror to assist in hairdressing arrangements.

With a start and much creaking of wheels, the aged horse dragged the machine back into dry ground when the bath and the swim was over, the occupant resumed her ordinary attire as best she could.

In connection with the passing of the bathing machine there has come all the change that has entered into our ideas as to bathing costume.

In days long past the art and romance was quite in the habit of saving the heroine from drowning, failing in love with her, and leading her to the altar, which was strange, considering the extraordinarily ugly garments in which the Victorian girl used to bathe.

During those days the average person hired a more or less shapeless sacque, usually made of brown linsey, that served as the "bathing gown," the name by which it went. It was usually very sandy and gritty, as well as very damp, when it was assumed, but it was only those who either lived at the seaside or were making a prolonged stay there, and who bathed regularly, who thought it worth while to provide themselves with a costume of their own.

Old-fashioned folk looked rather askance, as some of the ideas—in a very much modified form—found their way into England from the French places, and it took some seasons to live down prejudices in this direction. But the sewer styles won acceptance, and to-day the bathing-dress department is one of considerable importance at the great shops.

In short, bathing attire is now so becoming that a pretty girl clad in it looks her best, and it is generally agreed that this year's seaside fashions are more charming than ever.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Money to Start It Came From a State Lottery.

It is not generally known that the British Museum—that wonderful storehouse of treasures—was started from funds realized by a state lottery. It certainly proves that it is easy to raise money by this method.

A special Act of Parliament was passed in 1753 to authorize the lottery, and it mentions "sums which under the same act were to be raised by public lottery for the purchase and support of the Museum."

The total sum was £1,500,000, and 50,000 tickets were printed, of which 4,159 were to be fortunate ones. There were prizes ranging from one of £10,000, one of £5,000, two of £1,000, down to 3,000 of £10.

The prizes, together with £200 for the first ticket drawn, and £300 for the last ticket drawn, amounted to $500,000. Further, there was "a like sum payable in respect of the corresponding tickets," making the grand total £1,000,000 in prizes, or two-thirds of the money to be subscribed.

There were several additional clauses dealing with the method of selling the tickets and of drawing them. Also, selling chances for an enhanced sum was made illegal.

That lotteries were a success is proved by the fact that the British Museum is what it is to-day — the most wonderful museum in the world.

But how wicked it is that such an institution should owe its origin to a public lottery.

The First Postage Stamp.

Henry III. of England, who died in 1272, had among his court attendants several uniformed runners who carried his special messages. This may have been the beginning of the postal system. Germans and Austrians claim that the famous Count Roger of Thurn and Taxis was the first to organize a regular service. At any rate, he and his family made money out of this business for the fifteenth century. But they used no "stamps."

In France one Jean de Villayer brought into life the so-called "La Petite Poste." In 1650 he erected "wall boxes" in Paris, and in order to mail a letter one had to buy a prettily printed wrapper, and, after folding it around the letter, the whole thing was mailed in one of Villayer's boxes.

No further development occurred until 1690 in England, when one Robert Murray, whose business was upholstering, started a local penny post office service. William Docwra succeeded him, and the only thing on letters of that period that could be characterized as a stamp was a cancellation similar to those in use to-day.

But it was the British Government that created the first real postage stamp. Sir Rowland Hill designed the first stamps, and perfected the system of their sale and use.

Deep Mine Marvels.

For centuries man has been engaged in burrowing his way deeper and deeper into the crust of old Mother Earth, in order to extract the minerals which she hides beneath her surface.

A century ago 1,000 feet was thought to be a stupendous depth for any shaft; for in those days there were no engines capable of pumping from greater depths, and no system of ventillation had been devised which would make it possible to work in galleries at a greater distance from the surface.

Coal pits over 3,000 feet deep are now fairly common in England, while Belgium has two which exceed 4,000 feet in depth.

But coal is not alone in having deep pits. There is in Australia a silver mine whose bottom is 4,000 feet below the surface, while a gold mine at Bendigo, in Australia, has been sunk to 4,300 feet.

A famous transvaal gold-mining company is sinking a shaft which when complete will measure more than 7,000 feet. Put Seafell on top of Ben Nevis and you have a height corresponding to its depth.

CROWFOOT WAS LOYAL

INDIAN CHIEF REFUSED TO FIGHT AGAINST BRITISH.

Story of the Leader of Powerful Confederacy Composed of Blackfeet, Bloods, Piegans and Sarcees Who Refused to Join With Louis Reil In His Effort to "Drive the White Men Out of the Country,"

WHEN Canada recently changed the name of a small Western community from Crowfoot Crossing of Gleichen, it wiped away a tribute to one of the greatest Indian leaders of the Northwest—Crowfoot, chieftain of the Blackfeet and head of the powerful and warlike confederacy composed of Blackfeet, Bloods, Piegans, Sarcees and other allied tribes. His jurisdiction extended over more than ten thousand warriors, and his dominion included the greater portion of Western Canada.

Once Crowfoot held the future of the northwest country in the hollow of his hand—and chose peace and friendship with Great Britain rather than war and the struggle to drive the white men from Canada.

That was in 1885, when Riel sent his runners through the Indian country to stir up the Indians. Many of the tribes were ready to strike. It remained for Crowfoot to say the word. With him the attempt looked promising. Without his influence it was doomed. When the runner came Crowfoot listened to his message and refused to take part in the revolt. He knew the power of the British, and besides he had a treaty with the crown, and Crowfoot's word was good. The allied tribes followed the leader.

R. G. McBeth, who knew Crowfoot, tells of the situation which Crowfoot dominated.

There was no military reason why Crowfoot and his braves should not have stopped the revolt and swooped down upon the railway, which was just entering the country, pulled up its bright newly-laid rails, thus preventing the transport of soldiers to crush the revolt and leaving the vast country under the rule of the Indians. But back of Crowfoot's loyalty in that critical hour was his own innate sense of justice, and the firm and fair administration of the Canadian officials in the police.

It was in 1874 when the men in scarlet and gold first entered Crowfoot's life. Then in 1877 Col. MacLeod, commander of the forces, and the newly appointed governor-general of the Northwest Territories were commissioned to visit the southwestern part of the country that is now Alberta to arrange a treaty with the powerful and warlike tribes that occupied the country. The intention of that year nearly all the chiefs of the confederacy, under the leadership of Crowfoot, gathered before the council tent to receive the messengers.

Governor Laird was a very imposing figure as he sat there, tall, straight and manly looking and possessed of a mellow musical voice. He came to be known among the Indians as "the man who was like a straight"—a fine designation for a truth-teller and in direct contrast to the man who "spoke with a forked tongue," which was the polite way the Indians had of calling a man a liar. He was received by Crowfoot, the leading chief, and spoke words of welcome to the Indians carefully why a treaty was necessary for their own good as well as for that of the country and told of the land that would be given each tribe and also of the money and cattle and implements they would receive and promised that teachers would be sent to them.

Afterward the Indians were to go to their council lodges, talk it over and then return to the fort to get the terms settled in more detail and give their answer.

The next day with fine taste and a natural sense of oratory, the great chief, in his own tongue said: "While I speak, be kind and patient. I have to speak for my people, who are ignorant and who rely on me to follow that course which in future will tend to their good. The plains we have always lived on are the children of the plains; this has been our home and the buffalo have been our food always.

"I hope you look upon the Blackfeet, Bloods, Piegans and Sarcees as your children now, and that you will be indulgent and charitable to them.

"The advice given us by the people has proved to be very good. If the police had not come to this country where should we all be now. Rum and whiskey were killing us so fast that only few of us indeed would have been left to-day.

"The mounted police have protected us as the feathers of the bird protect it from the frosts of winter. I wish them all good and trust that all our hearts will remain in goodness from this day forward. I am satisfied. I will sign the treaty."

Few people who do not understand the situation will realize how this remarkable address relieved the tense situation and what it meant for the future history of the West.

The other chiefs followed the lead of Crowfoot, each making a speech, praising British rule as personified in the mounted police.

Thus was "Treaty No. 7," the greatest of them all, made and signed. And in 1885 when Riel sent his runners to stir up the Indians and "drive the white people out of the country," Canada had reason to be grateful to Crowfoot for the fact that the powerful warlike tribes which recognized his leadership flatly refused to take part.

A BRILLIANT THINKER.

Leslie Stephen Stands High Among the British Writers.

Among the London editors, critics and essayists of the last quarter of the nineteenth century, Leslie Stephen stands high. In 1871, at the age of thirty-nine, he became editor of the Cornhill Magazine, and was himself one of his foremost contributors. His greatest and most lasting achievement was, however, the foundation and supervision of the Dictionary of National Biography, the first volume of which appeared in 1886, and which was not completed until more than sixty volumes had been issued. To their pages he contributed no less than 378 biographical articles. "He excelled," says Prof. Oliver Elton in his "Survey of English Literature," "in the craft of biography, especially on a miniature scale. In the Dictionary he delivers endless judgments in a brief Tacitean manner without any parade or arrogance. He found more room in his little books, in the English Men of Letters Series, on Hobbes, Pope, Swift, Johnson, and George Eliot, all justly prized; and more room yet in his full biographies of Fawcett and of his brother, Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, which is conceived in a candid spirit, and which sketches the history of a gifted family." He returned to philosophy in his later years, and in "The English Utilitarians," published in 1900, gave one of the best extant presentations by Bentham, the two Mills, and other economists.

Leslie Stephen was brought up to become a clergyman of the Church of England, but he early broke loose from its ritualistic formulas and its dogmas. "The difference between the old skepticism and the new may be seen by comparing Hume's Essays with 'An Agnostic's Apology.' Many of the negative conclusions are similar; but the old complacency is gone. There is no peace now, but the stress of battle instead. The need has arisen of constructing some positive faith that shall consist with the negations. Stephen and Huxley are the strongest among the writers, who have not only to clear the mind of dogma, but to build upon the ground which is thus left empty. "Bear," such writers seem to say, "the cult of life as the climber bears the risk of frostbite, and always keep your head. If you lose your communion in the avalanche, struggle on with the courage, though not with the apathy, of the Stoic, and then go on. Get up another hill, and get down again, and at evening you can sup, perhaps cheerfully, or at least humorously, in the wayside inn. Afterwards there is always sleep, which is always good. You have got through your day, and perhaps you have added a new peak, or valley, to the map; and anyhow you were up in time to see the sun rise. And you have not got through upon other days. All this is Meredithian, too, and Stephen was Meredith's intimate friend."

In criticism, Stephen was judicial rather than imaginative. His papers on Shelley and Balzac," says Prof. Elton, "show too jealous a sense of their deficiencies in the eye of reason. He does not much like an artist to be extravagant; he is shy of being dragged after the chariot of a romantic rebel; and, even with the greatest poets, he does not overmuch let himself go. He is a Wordsworthian; he makes the obvious reserves, but his praise of the poet has an unusual note of intensity. He is deeply, though not pedantically, ethical; he has the 'nobleness' that distinguishes the best minds of the time, though he is wholly unaware of the fact and would have mocked at the description. His particular combination of critical balance, humanity and philosophic grasp is best seen in his Judgment of George Eliot. He has lived through her fame and its decline, and, as we shall see, he came forward as a guarded but sincere champion of her slighted merits. His sympathy with his subject is guaranteed, for he had passed through somewhat the same course of spiritual history. The problem was simpler in the case of Crabbe or Miss Austen; with such writers he is perfectly at home, taking them frankly as they are and untroubled by the sense of what they do not understand, though he well knows what that is."

Captured a Bear Cub.

On Thursday afternoon a black bear cub paid an unannounced visit to Napanee. A lady on Bridge street was cleaning a rug in her back yard, and leaving it for a few minutes to go into the house, was surprised on he return to find the rug occupied by a small black bear. The lady shooed it off her rug, and hastily retired to the house. The bear also beat it across the street where it paid a visit to another lady. It then ambled down to the river, several block away, and swam across to the Blute farm. A posse of nimrods immediately started out hunting for bear and discovered the poor bear in a tree. The question then was whether to shoot it and enjoy bear steak, or try and capture it alive. Eventually it was decided to capture the animal, and one of the brave hunters climed the tree and sawed off the limb on which the cub was sitting. Down came limb, down came bear, and in a few minutes his liberty was ended and he was led captive to Mr. V. Cowling's yard and placed in a cage. The cub was the centre of attraction all day Saturday when the cage was moved from the yard to the boulevard in front of Mr. Cowling's store.

Nugent—Martin.

A very quiet autumn wedding was solemnized in the Methodist church, Newburgh, on Wednesday afternoon, October 12th, 1921, when Miss Olive A. Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Martin, Wesley, became the bride of Mr. Harold Nugent, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Nugent, also of Wesley. The bride wore her travelling suit of navy duvetyn with hat to match, and was unattended. After the performing of the ceremony by the Rev. E. B. Cook, the young couple left for Kingston, Ottawa, and other points, carrying with them the best wishes of a host of friends. Upon their return they will reside at Wesley.

O'Connor—Lawlor.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Patrick's church, Napanee, on Monday morning, the 24th of October, 1921, when Miss Mary Lawlor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lawlor, of South Fredericksburgh became the bride of Edward M. O'Connor, son of Denis O'Connor, of the same township. The Rev. Father O'Connor performed the ceremony which was followed by nuptial mass at which a large number of friends and relatives assisted. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore her travelling suit of navy blue serge with dark blue hat to match. She was assisted by Miss Mary McKeown, of Newburgh, and Daniel Lawlor, brother of the bride, ably supported the groom. After the ceremony the happy couple left for an extended tour of western cities. The bride received many useful and costly gifts showing the high esteem in which the young couple were held. After their return they will reside in South Fredericksburgh.

Calbery-Wales.

A very quiet wedding was solemnized at Trinity Parsonage, Napanee, on October 5th, 1921, when Miss Hazel Wales, second eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wales, of Lime Lake, became the bride of Mr. J. H. Calbery, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Calgery, of Hasting village. The bride looked sweet in a smart blue suit, with blue plush hat to match. She was attended by her cousin, Mrs. Roy Embury, who also wore a pretty suit of blue. The groom was attended by Mr. Roy Embury. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Calbery left for Toronto. They will reside at Hastings.

Obituary.

We are just advised of the death on September 22nd, 1921, at Los Angeles, California, of Donald Grange McHenry, only son of Mrs. D. C. McHenry, a former resident of Napanee. The late Mr. McHenry, with his mother, had been living in Chicago, but removed to California a couple of years ago on account of the son's failing health, with the hope that the genial southern climate would restore him. The funeral service was held at the family residence, 1227 West St., on Sept. 24th, in the presence of the immediate relatives and some old Napanee friends. It was the wish of the deceased that he be cemated and that the remains be sent to Napanee for interment in the family plot. The deceased was in his 42nd year.

Curling Club Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Napanee Curling Club will be held in the Club House, on Friday evening, October 28th, at 8 p.m., when the election of officers for the coming season will take place. Napanee has always held a very high position in Eastern Ontario curling circles and the club will make a determined effort to maintain its position. In order to maintain this position new blood must be obtained. A large number of our citizens are bowling during the summer and from the ability displayed on the green it is a fair deduction that they would do equally well at the "roaring game." All old members are particularly requested to be present at the annual meeting and to bring with them any prospective new members.

British Navy Superstitions.

One of the very strongest and most ineffaceable of all superstitions in the royal navy—a superstition almost as strong to-day as ever it was—is that vessels bearing the names of royal personages are doomed to ill-luck; and, strange as it may seem, there is an undeniable historic basis for this feeling.

Some of the most terrible disasters ever known in connection with our navy have concerned war vessels with royal names. Two vessels called the Royal James came to disastrous ends. One of them exploded, and some 800 officers and seamen perished; the other ship so named was actually carried out of the mouth of the Thames by the Dutch under circumstances disgraceful to those in charge of the craft.

Then there is the forever memorable disaster to the Royal George, that turned over, and sank in sight of crowds at Spithead, over 1,000 souls, amongst whom were 300 women, being sacrificed. And second only to this hideous disaster is that which afterwards befell the Royal Charlotte, which was consumed by fire off Leghorn, over 800 of the very flower of the navy perishing with her.

When, in 1893, the Victoria, a new vessel, and the very triumph of modern invention, was rammed, and sank in sight of the whole fleet, there was not a sailor, who did not remember the dire fate of a royalty-named craft.

CHARLES TRIES A COUP

Attempts to Regain His Lost Australian Throne.

From Blue Depths of Skies He Came, Alighting From Airplane, and With Support of Several Battalions of Troops He Is Now Nearing Hungarian Capital—Civil War Is Expected.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Undaunted by his former fiasco, apparently unafraid of threats of the big or little Entente or both, ex-King Charles is nearing Budapest at the head of a small army. Charles has staked everything on his new hopes of regaining his lost throne.

The former emperor reached the soil of his own country at 7 o'clock Sunday morning. Vague reports reaching here are conflicting but sufficiently clear to show the romantic features of this latest coup.

From the depths of the blue skies he came. Alighting from the airplane which bore him on the first leg of his novel venture, he found Lieut.-Colonel Pronay, commander of Col. Pronay and who was awaiting him at Dedenburg. Accompanied by his guard he headed for Budapest.

Dr. Graetz, a former newspaper man, is the brains and director general of Charles' new coup.

Graetz was foreign minister when Charles made his first sensational entry into Hungary last spring and then acquired his office as a protest against the Budapest Government.

Graetz went to Steinamanger, where he remained with Charles all the time he was there when his former coup failed.

News of Charles' second entry into Hungary and his open defiance of the big and little Ententes has caused the fall of the Budapest Government, and the new Cabinet is said to include Apponyi and former Premier Friedrich.

At noon Sunday the military forces supporting former Emperor Charles had reached Budaors, four miles from the Hungarian capital, where sharp fighting was in progress. Admiral Horthy, regent of Hungary, is reported to be personally leading the troops against Charles. The forces with Charles are aggregate several battalions. They arrived at Budaors early Sunday morning. The sound of the guns was audible in Budapest.

An Exchange Telegraph despatch from Vienna states that the troops sent by Regent Horthy have repulsed the advance guard of Emperor Carl. The clash occurred at Budaner, in the vicinity of Budapest.

Emperor Carl's forces are reported to now consist of three divisions under command of Gen. Hegedues.

Telephone communication between Vienna and Budapest has been stopped.

Serbs Reinforce Troops.

BELGRADE, Jugo-Slavokia, Oct. 24.—Three divisions have been called to the Danube to reinforce the troops on the Hungarian border, and all railroad communications with Hungary were occupied Saturday night. The Government is in communication with Czecho-Slovakia and Roumania, as well as with the Allies, so that all may act in harmony.

The French and British Ambassadors have promised the support of their Governments in an effort to avoid warfare and prevent the restoration of Charles.

Would Amount to Casus Belli.

PRAGUE, Czecho-Slovakia, Oct. 24.—Czecho-Slovakia is declared to be committed to the policy of absolute opposition to the return of Charles, Premier Benes having recently declared that the restoration of Hapsburg would amount to a casus belli.

The Premier, who has been out of town, hurriedly returned to Prague and summoned the Cabinet to meet at once. The Parliamentary Foreign Affairs Committee will meet Monday to consider the situation. The Socialists, including the Germans, have called a mass meeting. It is considered significant that the German elements oppose Charles.

Killed by Brother.

NORTH BAY, Oct. 24.—Death in the Feronia settlement in the case of three-year-old Marie Rancier, of Feronia, a settlement ten miles north of here, when a bullet from the .22 rifle in the hands of her six-year-old brother, William, entered her left eye, emerging at the back of the head. The fatality took place in the home of the parents of the dozen of the children were out of the house.

The rifle had been left standing in the corner of a room by the father. Mrs. Rancier, when she left the house, left her six-year-old son rocking the cradle, while Marie was playing on the bed. As only the children were in the room at the time no details can be gleaned as to how the accident took place.

Taxi Plunged Down Bank.

TILLSONBURG, Ont., Oct. 24.—Mox Barrett had a miraculous escape from death shortly after 9 o'clock Saturday evening, when a taxi which he was driving went over a 20-foot embankment two miles west of town. He was making a return trip from Aylmer when the accident occurred, believed to have been caused by a broken steering gear.

The car in its descent turned over four times with the driver still at the wheel and when it finally came to a standstill caught fire and was totally destroyed. The driver escaped with a few cuts and bruises.

Burns Old Home.

CORNWALL, Ont., Oct. 24.—After destroying his home by fire on Sunday, William Hyde, of Heuvelion, 65 years of age, went to a tree some distance away, and took his life by hanging himself with a halter. Hyde and his wife separated some time ago. Recently his wife complained to the police that her husband had sent her threatening letters through the mails. He was arrested and kept in jail for four days, but was released on $200 bail.

Was Lost In the Bush.

SUDBURY, Ont., Oct. 24.—Peter Burke, a C. P. R. switchman, who was lost in the bush on a hunting trip near Paget on Wednesday and Thursday, was discovered near a swamp two miles from the railroad by a search party at 11.30 Saturday.

Burke is none the worse for his adventure, save that he is suffering from a mild form of "trench feet."

BANDITS WERE CAUGHT

Bank Robbers Run to Earth in Toronto.

Three Foreigners Were Captured In Spectacular Raid Which Followed Careful Investigation by Police—One Drew Gun, But Was Overpowered — Money Stolen From Bank of Hamilton Has Been Recovered.

TORONTO, Oct. 24.—Working swiftly, but surely, city detectives with a description of a second-hand automobile as a starting clue, ran down on Saturday three men who are charged with the daylight robbery of the College and Ossington branch of the Bank of Hamilton on Tuesday morning. All three men, all foreigners, are now in the cells, the car used in the get-away is in the hands of the police, and over $2,000 of the money believed to have been taken from the bank has been recovered.

The men under arrest are: Andrew Sarchuck, alias Frank Cooper, aged 25, formerly a mechanic and coal miner; John Kapalansky, aged 35, labourer; Sam Seniloff, aged 25, formerly employed as a presser in a tailoring establishment.

Sarchuck was arrested in a house on Denison avenue, but the other two were run to earth in a rooming house at 62 Centre avenue, operated by Seniloff. They were captured without bloodshed, but that a tragedy did not result was due to the quick action of Detective Ward. Ward, Detectives Mulholland and Leavitt went upstairs at the Centre avenue house and found Kapalansky. The latter drew an automatic and thrust it forward against Mulholland's stomach. Ward was standing by and, with a sudden drive of his fist, struck Kapalansky in the left eye, knocking him to his knees. In another minute he was overpowered and handcuffed. He offered no resistance, nor did Sarchuck. The latter was arrested by Sergeant-Detective Archibald and others.

The three men were then searched and $1,700 in bills was found upon them. A further search revealed a considerable sum of money under the oilcloth covering of the floor in one of the rooms. Two revolvers, fully loaded, were found in Kapalansky's room.

The men were taken down to headquarters, where they were lined up with others for identification. The bank officials were satisfied that the police had the right men, and ex-Constable Burns, who grappled with one of the bandits during the time of the hold-up and narrowly escaped being shot, declared that Kapalansky was the man who fired the shot.

The capture of the three men, whose movements recently are being traced with a view to seeing whether they had a hand in similar bank robberies in Hamilton, was due to aggressive work on the part of the detective office. Even with what they started was that the men had made their escape in a green Oldsmobile car with a nickled radiator covering, a description secured revealed the fact that no car answering to this description had been stolen for some time, which pointed to the probability that the car had used it had acquired it lawfully. The search then turned to the license records, and from the License Department at Queen's Park the detectives secured a list of owners of every Oldsmobile in Ontario, a big task in itself. From this list steps were taken to check up recent sales of cars by the various dealers. This revealed the fact that a green Oldsmobile had been sold by Brock-ey's to a man named Cooper of Denison avenue. Saturday morning the police went to the address given and found the man. When asked where he had been since Tuesday, the captive said he had been staying with friends at 62 Centre avenue. He also told the detectives that the car he had purchased was stored in a garage in the rear of Grange avenue, where Detective Ward found it.

Word of "Cooper's" arrest was telephoned into headquarters, together with his admission that he had been staying at 62 Centre avenue. With this tip, detectives went to the Centre avenue house with orders to bring the men back again. They rushed the house and found Seniloff dressing in a front room downstairs. Leaving Cronin with him, the others went upstairs and found Kapalansky. He was standing in the centre of the room with a green cap in his hand—an interesting circumstance in view of the fact that witnesses of the bank robbery had reported that one of the robbers wore a green hat. At first Kapalansky offered no resistance, standing with Mulholland while the others searched the room. Then Cronin entered and began to search the prisoner. As he did so a roll of bills fell to the floor, and it was as he was stooping to pick it up the man pulled his gun on Mulholland. It may have been his thought to make a break, but Ward's ready blow ended it.

The two men were taken to headquarters, and later all three were arraigned in the police court and remanded for a week.

Government Totters.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The Australian House of Representatives debated all last week the movement of the Country party to enforce economy by a test vote on the estimates. The Labor party, which proposed to vote against reduction, has decided under outside pressure to support the Country party, thereby placing the Government in a precarious position.

Constant manoeuvring has been indulged in to obtain stray votes, but the party alignment gives the Government a majority only by the casting vote of the chairman with the Speaker presiding. The debate will be continued this week.

That an acute crisis has been reached was admitted by both sides but the general opinion to-day was that the resentment expressed by the British representatives toward Eamonn de Valera's message to the Pope would be smoothed over and that the negotiations would proceed.

TAXI-DRIVER MURDERED.

Mysterious Crime Committed on Outskirts of Toronto.

TORONTO, Oct. 24.—Clubbed on the head with an iron bar in the hands of someone as yet unknown, dragged from his taxicab and apparently robbed of considerable money, and left helpless and bleeding on the roadside near Finch's Corners, on Saturday night, Harry Stron, aged about 24, died in the General Hospital at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, without recovering consciousness. The cause of death was a fractured skull, and according to the hospital authorities, Stron had several terrible wounds on the head. The weapon with which the deed was committed, an iron spike about fifteen inches long, such as is used by railroad workers, was found a few feet from a pool of blood in which Stron had lain after he was attacked by his slayers. County Constable Stewart and Detectives Ward and Carter have been assigned to the case, but as yet little is known as to the identity of the unfortunate taxi driver's assailants.

Stron, who had his stand at Farnham avenue and Yonge street, left that place about 6.15 on Saturday evening, with a load of people. As the identity of the persons nothing is known; they were not particularly noticed at the time they boarded Stron's cab.

What happened to Stron when he arrived at the spot where the murder was committed can only be deduced by the evidence left at the scene of the crime—the blood-stained iron spike, Stron's cap, the abandoned motor car and a lone dollar bill discovered trampled in the soft earth about a hundred feet from the pool of Stron's lifeblood.

It is the theory of the police that when Stron arrived at Finch's Corners, which is situated about a mile west of Yonge street, at 7.30 and approximately three-quarters of a mile west of Willowdale, one of the murderers dealt the driver a blow from the back of the vehicle. Dazed, Stron appears to have halted his machine and turned upon his attackers, for the left-hand side of the windshield, inside the cab and near the steering wheel, is bespattered with blood as is also the driving seat and the floor of the cab. But apparently he was overpowered by force of numbers, and dragged out of the cab to the front of the vehicle was standing. There is blood on the front of the fender. Having dragged their victim about ten yards from the cab, the murderers evidently robbed him of all he possessed in the way of money, but to their haste dropped the one-dollar bill.

Stupefied by the blows dealt him, Stron managed to stagger from the scene of the murder for a distance of about half-a-mile distant. His guide was a light in the home of Thomas H. Watt, a carpenter. Stron was unable to tell a coherent story, and could only mumble unintelligible sounds. Watt conveyed the injured man to the office of Dr. J. D. Story, Stop 34. Yonge street, where first aid was given, and from which place the police were notified of the tragedy. An ambulance was despatched to the doctor's office, and Stron was conveyed to the hospital. He was semi-conscious when admitted, but lapsed into a coma from which he never awoke.

Stron is described by those who knew him as a quiet, reserved man.

"It's wrong of me to discourage you like that," she said. "Marrying into the peerage is something, after all. You must come home every year—insist on it, Johnson, are these the best caviar bowls the hotel can furnish?"

And the Duchess of Lismore, late of Detroit, drifted off into a bitter argument with the humble Johnson.

CHAPTER XVI.

Paddock in Trouble.

MISS MEYRICK strolled away, out upon a little balcony opening off the dining room. She stood gazing down at the waving fronds in the courtyard six stories below. If only that fountain down there were Ponce de Leon's! But it wasn't. Tomorrow she must put youth behind. She must go far from the country she loved—did she care enough for that? Strangely enough, burning tears filled her eyes. Hot revolt surged into her heart. She stood looking down—

Meanwhile the other members of the dinner party were gathering with tender solicitude about their hostess in the ballroom beyond. Dick Minot, hopeless, glum, stalked moodily among them. Into the crowd drifted Jack Paddock, his sprightly air noticeably lacking, his eyes worried, dreadful.

"For the love of heaven," Minot asked, as they stepped together into a secluded corner, "what ails you?"

"Be gentle with me, boy," said Paddock unhappily. "I'm in a horrible mess. The graft, Dick—the good old graft. It's over and done with now."

"What do you mean?"

"It happened last night after our wild chase of Harrowby—I was fussed —excited—I prepared two sets of reparte for my two customers to use tonight"—

"Yes?"

"I always make carbon copies to refer to myself just before the stuff is to be used. A few minutes ago I took out my copies, Dick! I sent the same repartee to both of them!"

In spite of his own troubles, Minot laughed.

"Mirth, eh?" said Paddock grimly. "I can't see it that way. Anyway, this is my last appearance on any stage as a librettist. Kindly omit flowers."

And Mr. Paddock drifted gloomily away.

While the servants were passing cocktails on gleaming trays, Minot found the door to the balcony and stepped outside. A white wraith flitted from the shadows to his side.

"Mr. Minot," said a soft, scared little voice.

"Miss Meyrick," began Minot hurriedly, "I'm very glad to have a moment alone with you. I want to apologize—for last night. I was mad. I did Harrowby a very palpable wrong. I'm very ashamed of myself as I look back. Can I hope that you will—forget—all I said?"

She did not reply, but stood looking down at the palms far below.

"Can I hope that you will forget—and forgive?"

She glanced up at him, and her eyes shone in the dusk.

"I can forgive," she said softly, "but I can't forget. Mr.—Mr. Minot"—

"Yes."

"What—what—is woman's greatest privilege?"

Something in the tone of her voice sent a cold chill sweeping through Minot's very soul. He clutched the rail for support.

"I—if you'd answer," said the girl, "it would make it easier for"—

Aunt Mary's generous form appeared in the doorway.

"Oh, there you are, Cynthia. You are keeping the duchess' dinner waiting."

Cynthia Meyrick joined her aunt Minot stayed behind a moment. Below him Florida swam in the azure night. What had the girl been about to say?

Pulling himself together, he went inside and learned that he was to take in to dinner a glorious blond bridesmaid. When they were seated he found that Miss Meyrick's face was hidden from him by a profusion of Florida blossoms. He was glad of that. He wanted to think—think.

A few others were thinking at that table, Mrs. Bruce and the duchess among them. Mrs. Bruce was mentally rehearsing. The duchess glanced at her.

"The wittiest woman in San Marco," thought the hostess. "Bah!"

Mr. Paddock meanwhile was toying unhappily with his food. He had little to say. The attractive young lady he had taken in had already classified him as a bore. Most unjust of the attractive young lady.

"It's lamentable, really," Mrs. Bruce was speaking. "I've in one hour's society conversation has given way to the turkey trot. Our wits are in our feet. Where once people talked art, music, literature — now they tango madly. It really seems"—

"Everything you say is true," interrupted the duchess blandly, "I sometimes think the race of the future will be—a trotting race."

Mrs. Bruce started perceptibly. Her eyes lighted with fire. She had been working up to this line, and the coincidence was passing strange. She glared at the hostess. Mr. Paddock studied his plate intently.

"I for one," went on the Duchess of Lismore, "do not dance the tango or the turkey trot. Nor am I willing to take the necessary steps to learn them."

A little ripple ran round the table—the ripple that up to now had been

She looked timidly into his eyes.

"It is," she whispered faintly.

The most miserably happy man in history, he gasped.

"Cynthia! It's too late—you're to be married tomorrow. Do you mean—you'd call it all off now—at the last minute?"

She nodded her head, her eyes on the ground.

"My God!" he moaned and turned away.

"It would be all wrong to marry Harrowby," she said faintly. "Because I've come to—I—oh, Dick, can't you see?"

"See! Of course I see!" He clinched his fists. "Cynthia, my dearest"—

Below him stretched six stories of open space. In his agony he thought of leaping over the rail—of letting that be his answer. But, no, it would disarrange things so. It might even postpone the wedding!

"Cynthia," he groaned, "you can't understand. It mustn't be. I've given my word. I can't explain, I can never explain. But, Cynthia—Cynthia"—

Back in the shadow the girl pressed her hands to her burning cheeks.

"A strange love—yours," she said. "A love that blows hot and cold."

"Cynthia, that isn't true. I do love you"—

"Please! Please let us forget." She stepped into the moonlight, fine, brave, smiling. "Do we—dance?"

"Cynthia!" he cried unhappily. "If you only understood"—

"I think I do. The music has stopped. Harrowby has the next dance. He'd hardly think of looking for me here."

She was gone. Minot stood alone on the balcony. He was dazed, blind, trembling. He had refused the girl without whom life could never be worth while. Refused her to keep the faith!

He entered upon the bright scene inside, slipped unnoticed to the elevator and, still dazed, descended to the lobby. He would walk in the moonlight until his senses were regained. Near the main door of the De la Pax he ran into Henry Trimmer. Mr. Trimmer had a newspaper in his hand.

"What's the matter with the women nowadays?" he demanded indignantly. Minot tried in vain to push by him. "Seen what those London suffragettes have done now?" And Trimmer pointed to a headline.

"What have they done?" asked Minot.

"Done? They put dynamite under the statue of Lord Nelson in Trafalgar square and blew it sky high. It fell over into the Strand."

"Good!" cried Minot wildly. "Good! I hope it smashed the whole of London!" And, brushing aside the startled Trimmer, he went out into the night.

CHAPTER XVII.

Minot Goes Through Fire.

IT was nearly 12 o'clock when Mr. Minot, somewhat calmer of mind, returned to the De la Pax. As he stepped into the courtyard he was surprised to see a crowd gathered before the hotel. Then he noticed that from a second floor window poured smoke and flame and that the town fire department was wildly getting into action.

He stopped. His heart almost ceased beating. That was her window—the window to which he had called her on that night that seemed so far away—fast night! Breathlessly he ran forward.

And he ran straight into a group just descended from the ballroom. Of that group Cynthia Meyrick was a member. For a moment they stood gazing at each other. Then the girl turned to her aunt.

"My wedding dress!" she cried. "I left it lying on my bed. Oh, I can't possibly be married tomorrow if that is burned!"

There was a challenge in that last sentence, and the young man for whom it was intended did not miss it. Mad with the injustice of life, he swooped down on a fireman struggling with a wabbly ladder. Snatching away the ladder, he placed it against the window from which the smoke and flame spurted. He ran up it.

"Here!" shouted the chief of the fire department, laying angry hands on the ladder's base. "Wot you doing? You can't go in there."

"Why the devil can't I?" bellowed Minot. "Let go that ladder!"

He plunged into the room. The smoke filled his nostrils and choked him. His eyes burned. He staggered through the smoky dusk into another room. His hands met the brass bars of a bed. They closed over something soft and flimsy that lay upon it. He seized the something close and hurried back into the other room.

A fireman at another window sought to turn a stream of water on him. Water—on that gown!

"Cut that out, you fool!" Minot shouted. The fireman, who had suspected himself of saving a human life, looked hurt. Minot regained his window. Disheveled, smoky, but victorious, he half fell, half climbed, to the ground. The fire chief faced him.

"Who was you trying to rescue?" the chief demanded. His eyes grew wide. "You idiot!" he roared. "They ain't nobody in that dress."

"Darn it, I know that!" Minot cried. He ran across the lawn and stood, a panting, limp, battered, ludicrous figure, before Cynthia Meyrick.

"I—I hope it's the right one," he said, and held out the gown.

She took his offering and came very close to him.

"I hate you!" she said in a low tone.

"I—I was afraid you would," he muttered.

A stout from the firemen announced that the blaze was under control. To his dismay, Minot saw that an admiring crowd was surrounding him. He broke away and hurried to his room.

Cynthia Meyrick's final words to him rang in his ears. Savagely he tore at his ruined collar.

Was this ridiculous farce never to end?

As if in answer a distant clock struck 12. He shuddered.

GET IT AT WALLACE'S

combined glare as long as he could, then he looked up into the night.

"How—how close the stars seem," he murmured faintly.

It was noted afterward that Mrs. Bruce maintained a vivid silence during the remainder of that dinner. The duchess, on the contrary, wrung from her parched lines every possibility they held.

And in that embattled setting Mr. Minot sat, deaf to the delicous lisp of the debutante at his side. What was woman's greatest privilege? Wasn't it—

His forehead grew damp. His knees trembled beneath the table. "Jephson—Thacker, Jephson—Thacker," he said over and over to himself.

After dinner when the added guests invited by the duchess for the dance crowded the ballroom Minot encountered Jack Paddock. Mr. Paddock was limp and pitiable.

"Ever apologize to an angry woman?" he asked. "Ever try to expostulate with a storm at sea? I've had it out with Mrs. Bruce—offered to do anything to atone. She said the best thing I could do would be to disappear from San Marco. She's right. I'm going. This is my exit from the butterfly life. And I don't intend to say goodby to the duchess, either."

"I wish I could go with you," said Minot sadly.

"Well, come along."

"No. I—I'll stick it out. See you later."

Mr. Paddock slipped unostentatiously away in the direction of the elevator. On a dais hidden by palms the orchestra began to play softly.

"You haven't asked to see my card," said Cynthia Meyrick at Minot's side.

He smiled a wan smile and wrote his name opposite No. 3. She drifted away. The music became louder, rising to the bright stars themselves. The dances that had furnished so much bitter conversation at table began to break out. Minot hunted up the balcony and stood gazing miserably down at fairyland below.

There Miss Meyrick found him when the fifth dance was imminent.

"Is it customary for girls to pursue their partners?" she inquired.

"I'm sorry," he said weakly. "Shall we go in?"

"It's so—so glorious out here."

He sighed a sigh of resignation. He turned to her.

"You asked me what is woman's greatest privilege," he said.

"Yes."

"Is it—to change her mind?"

"I hate you!" said Cynthia Meyrick.

Tomorrow at high noon!

Early Tuesday morning, while Mr. Minot still slept and mercifully forgot, two very wide awake gentlemen sat alone together in the office of the San Marco Mail. One was Manuel Gonzale, proprietor of that paper, as immaculate as the morn: the other was that broad and breezy gentleman known in his present incarnation as Mr. Martin Wall.

"Very neat—very neat indeed," said Mr. Wall, gazing with evident approval at an inky smelling sheet that lay before him. "It ought to do the work. If it does it will be the first stroke of luck I've had in San Marco."

Gonzale smiled, revealing two even rows of very white teeth.

"You do not like San Marco?" he ventured.

Mr. Wall snorted angrily.

"Like it? Does a beheaded man like the ax? In a long and golden professional career I've never struck anything like the town before for hard luck. I'm not in it twenty-four hours when I'm left alone, my hands tied, with stuff enough to make your eyes pop out of your head. That's pleasant. Then, after spending two months and a lot of money trailing Lord Harrowby for the family jools, I finally cop them. I give the crew of my borrowed boat orders to steam far, far away and run to my cabin to gloat. Do I gloat? Ask me. I do not gloat. I find the famous Chain Lightning's collar is a very superior collection of glass, worth about 23 cents. I send back the glass and stick around, hoping for better days. And the best I get is a call from the owner of my yacht with orders to vacate at once. When I first came here I swore I'd shut that jewel store again—alone. But there's a jinx after me in this town. What's the use? I'm going to get out."

"But before you go," smiled Manuel, "one stroke of luck you shall have."

"Maybe. I owe that to you. This kind of thing"—he motioned toward the damp paper—"is not in my line." He bent over a picture on the front page. "That cut came out pretty well didn't it? Lucky we got the photograph before big brother George arrived."

"I have always found San Marco lucky," replied Gonzale—"always, with one trifling exception." He drummed reminiscently on his desk.

"I say, who's this?" Mr. Wall pointed to a line just beneath the name of the paper. "Robert O'Neil, Editor and Proprietor," he read.

Manuel Gonzale gurgled softly some where within, which was his cunning, noncommittal way of indicating mirth.

"Ah, my very virtuous managing editor," he said. "One of those dogs who dealt so vilely with me. I have told you of that. Manuel Gonzale does not forget." He leaned closer. "This morning at 2, after O'Neil and Howe had sent today's paper to press as usual, Luypas, my circulation manager, and I arrived. My virtuous editors had departed to their rest. Luypas and I went to the presses. We substituted a new first page form. O'Neill and Howe—they will not know. Always they sleep until noon. In this balmy climate it is easy to lie abed."

Again Gonzale gurgled.

"May their sleep be dreamless," he said. "And should our work of the morning fall may the name of O'Neill be the first to concern the police."

Wall laughed.

"A good idea," he remarked. He looked at his watch. "Nine-fifteen. The banks ought to be open now."

Gonzale got to his feet. Carefully he folded the page that had been lying on his desk.

"The moment for action has come," he said. "Shall we go down to the street?"

"I'm in strange waters," responded Martin Wall uneasily. "The first city I've ever taken out of my line. I don't believe in it either. A man should have his specialty and stick to it. Maybe I'll get used to the money. Am I better perfect in my part, I wonder?"

The door of the Mail office opened and a sly little Cuban with an evil face stepped in.

"Ah, Luypas," Gonzale said, "you are here at last! Do you understand? Your boys, they are to be in the newsroom—yes? You are to sit near that telephone. At a word from my friend, Mr. Martin Wall, today's edition of the Mail is to flood the streets, the newsstands, instantly. Delay might be fatal. Is that clear?"

"I know," said Luypas.

"Very good," said Gonzale. He turned to Martin Wall. "Now is the time," he added.

The two descended to the street. Opposite the Hotel de la Pax they parted. The sleek little Spaniard went on alone and mounted boldly those pretentious steps. At the desk he informed the clerk on duty that he must see Mr. Spencer Meyrick at once.

"But Mr. Meyrick is very busy today," the clerk objected.

"Say this is life and death," replied Gonzale, and the clerk, wilting, telephoned the millionaire's apartments.

Finally Spencer Meyrick appeared, pompous, red faced, a hard man to handle, as he always had been. The Spaniard noted this, and his slits of eyes grew even narrower.

"I have something to show you," said Gonzale politely and removed from his pocket a copy of the San Marco Mail, still damp from the presses.

"HARROWBY WASN'T TAKING ANY CHANCES."

Underneath, in slightly smaller type, Spencer Meyrick read:

REMARKABLE FORESIGHT OF ENGLISH FORTUNE HUNTER WHO WEDS MISS MEYRICK TODAY—TOOK OUT A POLICY FOR $200,000 WITH BOYD'S, SAME TO BE PAYABLE IN CASE THE BEAUTIFUL HEIRESS SUFFERED A CHANGE OF HEART.

Prominent on the page was a large photograph which purported to be "an exact facsimile of the policy." Mr. Meyrick examined it. He glanced through the story, which happened to be commendably brief. He told himself he must remain calm, avoid fireworks, think quickly. Laying the paper on his knee, he turned to the little white garbed man beside him.

"What trick is this?" he asked sharply.

"It is no trick, sir," said Gonzale pleasantly. "It is the truth. That is a photograph of the policy."

Old Meyrick studied the cut again.

"I'll be hanged!" he remarked.

"I have no desire to annoy," Gonzale went on. "But there are 5,000 copies of today's Mail at the office ready to be distributed at a signal from me. Think, sir! Newsboys on the street with that story at the very moment when your daughter becomes Lady Harrowby!"

"I see," said Meyrick slowly. "Blackmail."

"You're a clever little dog," said Meyrick through his teeth.

"You are not exactly complimentary. However, let us say for the argument you buy the Mail at once. I am, by the way, empowered to make the sale. You take charge. You hurry to the office. You destroy all copies of today's issue so far printed. You give orders to the composing room to kill this first page story, and set it in 'Please kill,' you say, a term with newspaper men."

"Um! And your price?"

"It is a valuable property."

"Especially valuable this morning, I take it," sneered Meyrick.

"Valuable at any time. Our presses cost $1,000 our linotypes $2,000. And there is that other thing—so hard to estimate definitely—the wide appeal of our paper. The price—well, $15,000. Extremely reasonable. And I will include the good will of the retiring management."

"You contemptible little"— began Spencer Meyrick.

"My dear sir, control yourself," pleaded Gonzale, "or I may be unable to include the good will I spoke of. Would you care to see that story on the street? You may at any moment. There is but one way out—buy the newspaper. Buy it now. Here is the plan: You go with me to your bank. You procure $15,000 in cash. We go together to the Mail office. You pay me the money, and I leave you in charge."

Old Meyrick leaped to his feet.

"Very good!" he cried. "Come on!"

"One thing more," continued the crafty Gonzale. "It may pay you to note—we are watched, even now. All the way to the bank and thence to the office of the Mail we will be watched. Should any accident, now unforeseen, happen to me that issue of the Mail will go on sale in five minutes all over San Marco."

"I understand! Come on!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

"There Will Be No Wedding."

THERE must be some escape. The trap seemed absurdly simple. Across the hotel lawn, down the hot avenue, in the less hot plaza, Meyrick sought a way. A naturally impulsive man, he had difficulty restraining himself. But he thought of his daughter, whose happiness was more than money in his eyes.

No way offered. At the counter of the tiny bank Meyrick stood writing his check, Gonzale at his elbow. Suddenly behind them the screen door slammed, and a wild eyed man with flaming red hair rushed in.

"What is it you want?" Gonzale screamed.

"Out of my way, Don Quixote!" cried the red topped one. "I'm a windmill, by my arms breathe death. Are you Mr. Meyrick? Well, tear up that check!"

"Gladly," said Meyrick. "Only"—

"Notice the cutbirds down here!" went on the wild one. "Noisy little beasts, aren't they? Well, after this take off your hat to 'em. A catbird saved you a lot of money this morning."

"I'm afraid I don't follow"— said the dazed Spencer Meyrick.

"No? I'll explain. I have been working on this man's paper for the last week. So has a very good friend of mine. We knew he was crooked, but we needed the money, and he promised us not to pull off any more blackmail while we stayed. Last night, after we left the office, he arranged this latest. Planned to intimidate me. You little devil"—

Manuel, frightened, leaped away.

"We usually sleep until noon," went on O'Neill. "He counted on that. Enter the catbird. Sat on our windowsill at 10 a. m. and screeched. Woke us up. We felt uneasy. Went to the office, broke down a bolted door and found what was up."

"Dog!" foamed Manuel. "Outcast of the gutter"—

"Save your compliments! Mr. Meyrick, my partner is now at the Mail office destroying today's issue of the Mail. We've already ruined the first page form, the cut of the policy and the negative. And we're going north as fast as the Lord will let us. You can do what you please. Arrest our little lemon tinted employer if you want to."

Spencer Meyrick stood, considering.

"However, I've done you a favor," O'Neill went on. "You can do me one. Let Manuel off—on one condition."

"Name it."

"That he hands me at once $200, $100 for myself, the other for my partner. It's legitimate salary money due us. We need it. A long walk to New York."

"I myself"— began Meyrick.

"Don't want your money," said O'Neill; "want Gonzale's."

"Gonzale's you shall have," agreed Meyrick. "You pay him!".

"Never!" cried the Spaniard.

"Then it's the police," hinted O'Neill.

Gonzale took two yellow bills from a wallet. He tossed them at O'Neill.

"There, you cur"—

"Careful, cried O'Neill, "or I'll punch you yet!"

He started forward, but Gonzale hastily withdrew. O'Neill and the millionaire followed to the street.

"Well, my boy," answered Spencer Meyrick, "if I can ever do anything for you in New York come and see me."

"You may have to make good on that," laughed O'Neill, and they parted.

O'Neill hastened to the Mail office. He waved yellow bills before the lanky Howe.

"In the nick of time," he cried. "Me, the fair haired hero. And here's the fare, Harry—the good old railroad fare."

"Heaven be praised," said Howe. "I've finished the job, Bob. Not a trace of this morning's issue left. The fare! North in parlor cars! "My tobacco heart sings. Can't you hear the elevated"—

"Music, Harry, music."

"And the newsboys on Park row"—

"Cirrus can't touch them. Where can we find a time table, I wonder?"

Meanwhile, in a corner of the plaza, Manuel Gonzale spoke sad words in the ear of Martin Wall.

"It's the jinx," mourned Wall, with conviction. "The star player in everything I do down here. I'm going to burn the sand hotfooting it away. But whither, Manuel, whither?"

"In Porto Rico," replied Gonzale, "I have not yet plied my trade. I go there."

"Palm Beach," sighed Wall, "has diamonds that can be observed to sparkle as far away as the New York society columns. But, alas, I lack the wherewithal to support me in the style to which my victims are accustomed."

"Try Porto Rico," suggested Gonzale. "The air is mild—so are the police. I will stake you."

"Thanks. Porto Rico it is. How the devil do we get there?"

Up the main avenue of San Marco Spencer Meyrick walked as a man going to avenge. With every determined step his face grew redder, his eye more dangerous. He looked at his watch. Eleven.

The eleventh hour! But much might happen between the eleventh hour and high noon.

In the Harrowby suit the holder of the title, a handsome and distinguished figure, adorned for his wedding, walked curiously the rather worn carpet. His brother, hastily pressed into service as best man, sat puffing at a cigar with a persistency which indicated a somewhat perturbed state of mind on his own part.

"Brace up, Allan," he urged. "It'll be over before you realize it. Remember my own wedding. Gad, wasn't I frightened? Always that way with a man. No sense to it, but he just can't help it. Never forget that little parlor, with the flower of Marion society all about, and me with my teeth chattering and my knees knocking together."

"It is a bit of an ordeal," said Allan weakly. "Chap feels all sort of—gone —inside"—

The telephone, ringing sharply, interrupted. George Harrowby rose and stepped to it.

"Allan? You wish Allan? Very well. I'll tell him."

He turned away from the telephone and faced his brother.

"It was old Meyrick, kid. Seemed somewhat hot under the collar. Wants to see you in their suit at once."

"What—what do you imagine he wants?"

"Going to make you a present of Riverside drive, I fancy. Go ahead, boy. I'll wait for you here."

Allan Harrowby went out, along the dusky corridor to the Meyrick door. Not without misgivings, he knocked. A voice boomed, "Come!" He pushed open the door.

He saw Spencer Meyrick sitting purple at a table and beside him Cynthia Meyrick in the loveliest gown of all the lovely gowns she had ever worn. The beauty of the girl overwhelmed Harrowby a bit. Never demonstrative, he had a sudden feeling that he should be at her feet.

"You—you sent for me?" he asked, coming into the room. As he moved closer to the girl he was to marry he saw that her face was whiter than her gown and her brown eyes strained and miserable.

"We did," said Meyrick, rising. He held out a paper. "Will you please look at that?"

His lordship took the sheet in unsteady hands. He glanced down. Slowly the meaning of the story that met his gaze filtered through his dazed brain. "Martin Wall did this," he thought to himself. He tried to speak, but could not. Dumbly he stared at Spencer Meyrick.

"We want no scene, Harrowby," said the old man wearily. "We merely want to know if there is in existence a policy such as the one mentioned here?"

Plain Talks - No. 7

DEAR PEOPLE,—

We purpose taking for our text this period, "Sell Your Hammer and Buy a Horn." Our past lectures, besides being to us very profitable, have proved also to have annoyed one or two persons, namely, bums and stool pigeons. So accept our apologies if we seem to be blowing a little, and try us out and we will prove our words. We intend during the coming months to do a little profit sharing among our friends. Whilst visiting in Toronto and West it was our good fortune to become acquainted with leather dealers of a much larger standing than some of our competitors, and also to buy in markets more reasonable. By buying in large quantities we were able to purchase the best oak tanned leather at 17c. below ordinary market price. So as an inducement for you to try out this real good quality we intend to make a big reduction in the price of our shoe repairs, so take note of the following list and give us a trial to convince you we have the real goods.

Town Price		Our Price
$1.45....	Men's Soles	$1.25
.50....	Men's Heels	.40
1.10...	Ladies' Soles	.90
.35....	Ladies' Heels	.25

GROUP No. 3

COMPRISES INDIVIDUALLY STYLED PATTERN GARMENTS OF UNSURPASSED BEAUTY AND CHARM AT

Prices of Ordinary Every-Day Coats

Beauty, warmth, and service, all three important factors, have been most masterfully built into these Coats. The very richness of the cloth itself suggests refinement, and added to this for beauty and warmth are sumptuous Fur Collars of Canadian Beaver, Australian Opossum, Coon, Hudson Seal, and Beaverene—the linings, in plain and fancy designs, are unusually good—the embroideries and other trimmings emphasize the exclusiveness of these models—while the cut off each garment (the style) reflects the very last word for Fall and Winter, 1921.

A model in Terra-Cotta Duvetyn is embroidered in black, with Fur Collar and Cuffs of Hudson Seal.

Sale price $60.00. Regular $90.00 value.
